of the chamber of the parliament and the power stood where the parliament began to be formed, and not where it ended.

The Parliament of France is sometimes called the Court of Peers, and the several chambers their several Peers. It is not a court of appeal, but a court of decision, wherein the law is not taken up from the books, but formulates itself from the decisions of the judges, and is not represented by the judges, but by the judges themselves. The Parliament of France is not a court of law, but a court of equity, wherein the law is not taken up from the books, but formulates itself from the decisions of the judges, and is not represented by the judges, but by the judges themselves. The Parliament of France is not a court of law, but a court of equity, wherein the law is not taken up from the books, but formulates itself from the decisions of the judges, and is not represented by the judges, but by the judges themselves. The Parliament of France is not a court of law, but a court of equity, wherein the law is not taken up from the books, but formulates itself from the decisions of the judges, and is not represented by the judges, but by the judges themselves.